Help for Destitute Refugee Student

By Nick Blud

Abel Wako is shivering at the thought and the actuality of approaching winter. He possesses no winter clothing and he lives on a variety of inexpensive foods, most of which are damaged items. He attends classes at Erindale yet suffers academically because the cost of all the glossy and overpriced textbooks are beyond his means.

Such was the bleak picture presented by WUSC (World University Service Canada) President Robert Follows at last Friday's ECSU meeting. Mr. Follows appealed to ECSU for a $500.00 sum to help cover Abel Wako's needs. The WUSC President explained that Abel was literally "dropped on the doorstep" by the UN. Originally from Ethiopia, his tuition has been waived as he is an official refugee student but he still lacks living expenses. Due to a technicality Abel cannot apply for a bursary and the representative group for part-time students at Erindale, EPUS, has problems in giving him money because he is not a part-time student.

After a relatively brief discussion, ECSU granted Abel Wako the money, $200.00 of which will be in the form of credit at the Erindale book store.

Follows felt "extremely appreciative" of ECSU's action and he added, "Don't get him wrong. If you see him around campus with half decent clothes then he's wearing the clothes I gave him. He has nothing of his own."

20 Residents Pass the Barr

By Fariyal Poonawalla

This year's first Residence Council meeting resulted in the election of a new Residence Council Chairman. Chris Barr, defeated former chairman Chris Parker by 20 to 19 in a secret ballot election on September 19,1983.

The election of Barr as chairman, however, put Parker in the running for vice-chairman, along with Arlene Hebert, presently chairman for ECSU. This new position on residence council was created this year for the purpose of "sharing in the administrative hassles" as phrased by Parker.

The meeting opened with discussion concerning the value and duties of the new vice-chairman role. Newer members were informed as to how

Visa Students Take Legal Action

TORONTO (CUP) Visa students may take legal action against the University of Toronto.

Outraged by this year's 40 per cent tuition fee increase, an organization of foreign undergraduate students affected by the hike have engaged a lawyer to determine their course of action.

The Committee of Concerned Students may seek legal action based on the Inflation Restraint Act of 1982. Tuition fees qualify under the "administered price" clause of the act, and the Ministry of Colleges and Universities fits the definition of a "public regulatory agency" the committee says.

The ministry sets fee levels for visa studenst, and is deviating from its own government's anti-inflation legislation by grossly over stepping the five per cent guideline, the committee charged.

The fee hike affects first and second year foreign students as part of the provincial government's policy to make foreign students assume full responsibility for the cost of their education.

The Committee's protest centres around the U of T's delayed notification of the hike until late in the final term, although the policy was set in February, 1982.

The government softened the blow slightly in June, by exempting second year students from one term's worth of the fee hike this year.

For new U of T registrants, the cost of a full course load in Arts and Science will rise to $4,160 from $2,700 and to $6,775 from $4,400 for engineering.

The students have paid this year's increased fees because U of T will not enrol them otherwise. But the students' lawyer, Kenneth Swan, said their payment will not prejudice their case in court, when the students will seek reimbursement for the increase.

Is Objectivity Really an Impossibility?

The editorial. To some a barren superfluity of words, to others the means by which on of the most meaningful functions of the journalist is executed.

In addition to the task of communicating unbiased facts to the reader, it is also crucial that we offer commentary on the issues of the day so that readers may have some perspective from which to form thier own opinions.

The commitment to fair and accurate coverage of the news necessarily involves a separation of fact from value judgements.

The view that journalists should actively seek to counterbalance prevalent trends (commonly called advocacy journalism) falls short - far short - of any committment to the expression of truth. Find out why next week...

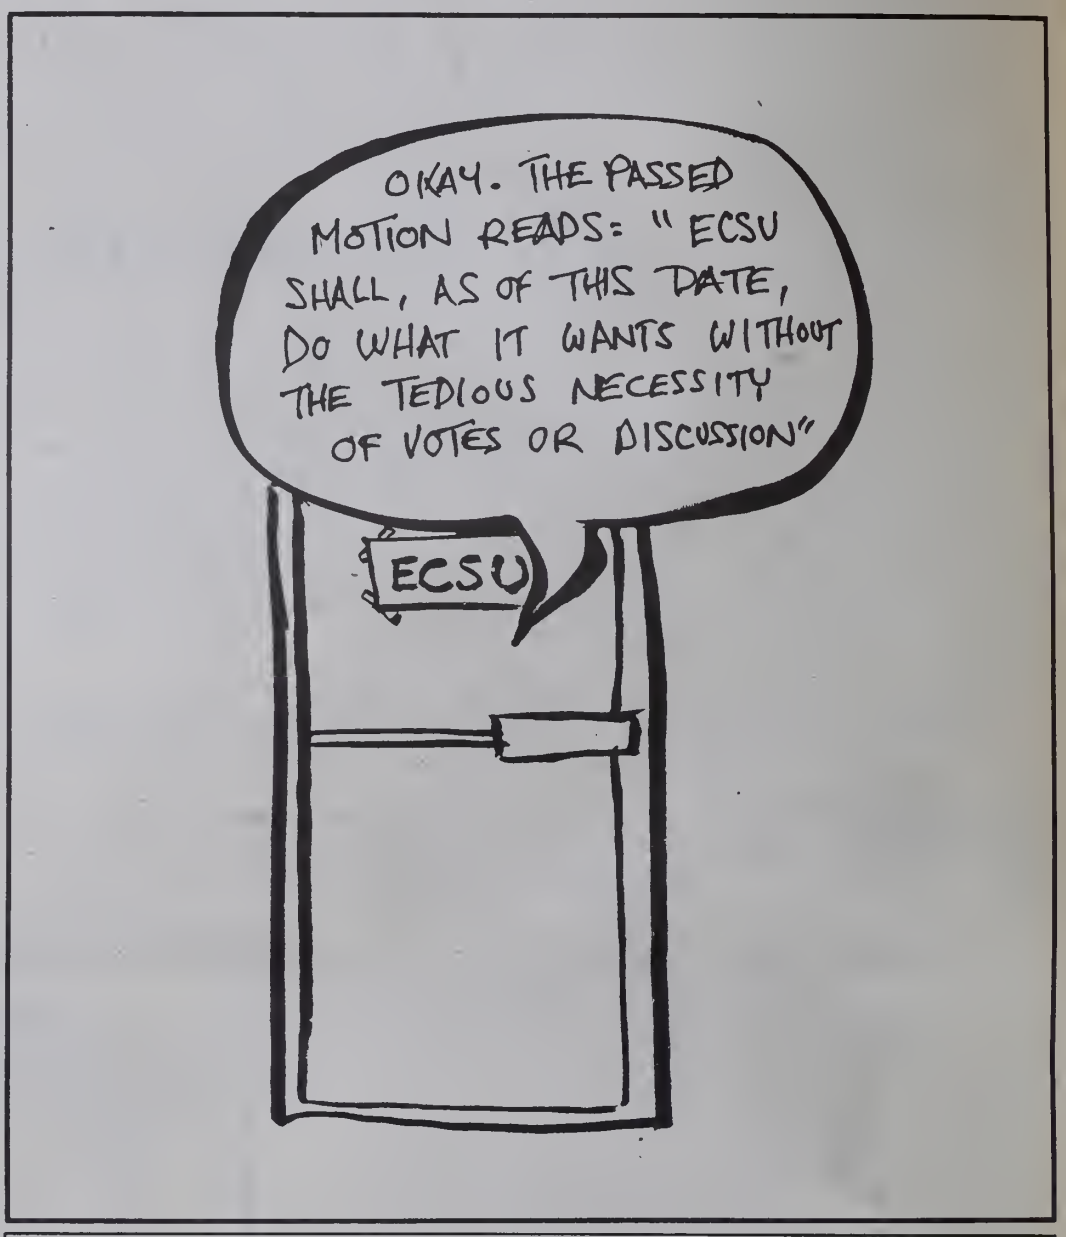
Thanks

One of the measures of good government is the extent to which it responds to the needs of the people. This week ECSU granted financail assistance to a desperately needy student - a refugee from Ethiopia, under the protection of the World University Services of Canada. We congratulate ECSU for its immediate and whole-hearted response. The needy student is still in need of all kinds of assistance - clothes, money, etc. Follow the lead of your student government. Contribute to a worthy cause. Contact an ECSU director for details.

But... No Thanks!

What exactly is ECSU's policy on closed meetings anyway? As we understand it, they have the right to close meetings when they discuss matters concerning their employees. While the actual discussion is not recorded, the motion(s) arising from the closed session should be made public. Here's the problem. ECSU closes a meeting, discusses an employee and makes a motion which reads approximately: 'That council support the actions of the executive earlier this week.' What does that tell us? What was actually decided or done? How many more such motions can we expect?

It's immoral; it undermines the integrity of every member of the corporation. It's a pity we must praise and condemn our politicians in the same breath. This inconsistency cannot complement our overall opinion of them.



OKAY. THE PASSED MOTION READS: "ECSU SHALL, AS OF THIS DATE, DO WHAT IT WANTS WITHOUT THE TEDIOUS NECESSITY OF VOTES OR DISCUSSION"

Just in case anyone at ECSU feels bad about your Average Editorial, I thought we should tell them how we (on the medium II Board of Publishers) avoid mediocrity. It's a simple strategy and it should work as well for ECSU as it has for us. Here's the strategy folks: don't have any meetings, a Board that doesn't meet can hardly be accused of mediocrity.

Mr. Hardie, I am aware that you have made many valiant attempts at gathering this Board together - the problem does not rest with you. In July we (the Board) agreed to set some objectives at our next meeting; if we ever have that meeting I would suggest that one of our primary goals should be to attempt to shoot the same level of mediocrity that ECSU seems to have achieved. With time and hard work - I'm sure we can do it.

Jack Daniel Distillery Named a National Historic Place by the United States Government

AT THE JACK DANIEL DISTILLERY, you can taste for yourself why our whiskey is so uncommonly smooth.

Iron-free. From an underground spring.

As soon as you sip the water we use, you can tell it's something special. That's because it flows, pure and iron-free, from a limestone spring located deep under the ground. At Jack Daniel Distillery, we've used this iron-free water since our founder settled here in 1866. Once you try our whiskey, we believe, you'll know why we always will.

Looking Back...74-75

Auspicious Beginnings

By Anne Hanley

medium II was just getting off its feet when I first joined its staff in January of 1975. That first year, it was located in Room 5005 of the South Building. Gregg Troy was the editor, Harrie Vrendonberg the assistant editor, and Larry Cooper the man in charge of finances. Total staff consisted of about 10 people; some having worked on medium II's predecessor, The Erindalian. Most however, were new staff, and there was a shared air of both excitement and fun. What I remember most vividly now is the camaraderie. We knew we were creating a good paper. And we were proud of it.

In the spring of 1975, Tom Maloney joined the staff at medium II as sports editor. And Dan Acks started to write his Acksline column. Rob Mowat also joined us that year. These three were to be the stalwarts behind medium II when we moved to the North Building the following year. Tom became editor, Rob his assistant editor and our favourite raconteur, and Dan features editor. Both Dan and Rob contributed regular columns to medium II, with Dan continuing his Acksline column. A very special columnst and news writer joined us that year: John Challis. Under the guise of Trapper Chall, John shared both his incisive wit and clear eyed candour with both the readers of medium II and its staff.

Major stories that year included the introduction of fees for the St. George bus route to Erindale and the library strike at Robarts. The library strike throughout its entirety was covered diligently by our copy editor, Heidi Putzer. One interview I remember with special fondness was one that Dan Acks and I had with Gary Lautens at The Star. Other interviews conducted by Dan included Elwy Yost and Rainer Schwartz. Entertainment editor that year was Bruce Dowbiggin, assisted most ably by Dudley Vineplot.

I am currently employed at Maclean Hunter as production supervisor of The Medical Post and its Quebec counterpart, le courrier medical. Many of the people I worked with on medium II are working in the journalism or writing fields across Canada. I look back on my days at medium II with warmth because of the introduction it gave me to putting out a newspaper. But even more lasting, it introduced me to a group of people whose personalities and talents remain vivid even today. And those memories are what I count as most important.

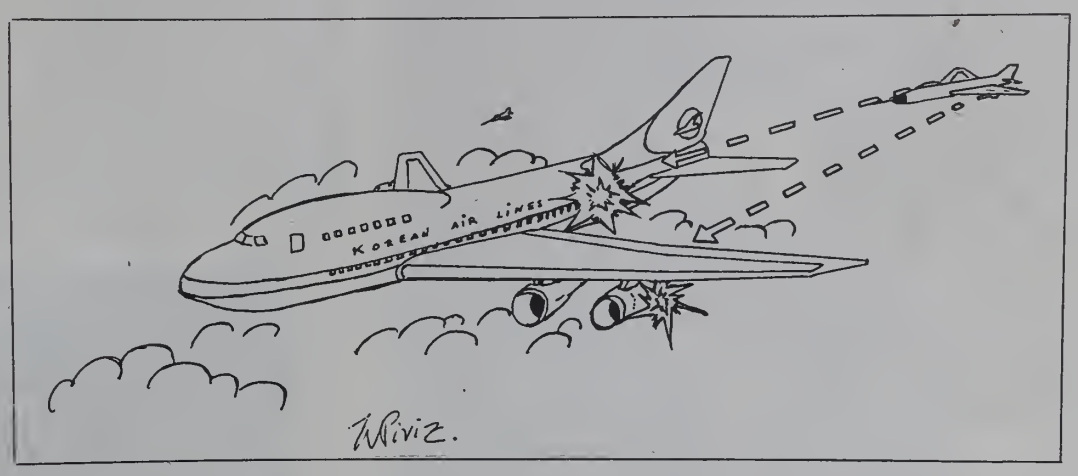
Fatal Flight of the Phoenix

By Wilson Piriz



There are things in this dangerous world of ours that cannot possibly be understood without forcing the imagination to the limits of comprehension. The shooting down by Soviet war planes of Korean Air Lines (KAL) Flight 007 on September 1st is one of those unexplainable acts, perhaps too akin to the mysterious nature of the human animal.

The 747 Jumbo jet, carrying 269 passengers and bound to Seoul, South Korea, was shot down by Soviet Mig-23 and Su-15 interceptors after the commercial airliner wandered into Soviet air space and, for a period of approximately 2 hours, flew over strategically important areas of the U.S.S.R. like the Kamchatka Peninsula and Sakhalin Island. According to the TASS report dated September 6, 1983, "...attempts were made to establish contact with it (the Korean airliner), including with the help of the known general call signal on the international emergency frequency of 121.5 megacycles... So these signals had to be received by the intruder plane, but it did not respond to them." After a lengthy exchange of radio messages between the Soviet pilot closer to the KAL jet and the Soviet ground command, a decision was made to terminate the flight. The Su-15 fighter plane carries two air-to-air missiles: one heat-seeking, the other radar homing. Apparently both these missiles were fired, the heat-seeking one going to one of the 747 engines while the radar homing one going straight to the giant fuselage. Flight 007 plunged from an altitude of 33,000 feet (10,000 metres) into the Sea of Japan, setting the stage for a major international confrontation among the superpowers. But what is most outrageous is that a score of questions concerning this episode remain unanswered. Why? Who benefits from this gutless crime? What is all this conducive to?

There was a family that narrowly escaped its destiny. While the KAL airliner was in a technical stop at Anchorage Alaska, Robert Sears, a technical freight handler working for Alaska International Air decided to stay behind. He has been on a vacation trip in New York, together with his wife and two children. The Sears family had a new lease on life.

It certainly does not help to ease tensions between the arch-rivals of our time, the United States and the Soviet Union, tensions that have dangerously escalated in the past few years. As expected, the first salvo of accusations came from the first and foremost anti-Soviet figure in the U.S. Government, President Ronald Reagan. Referring to the nature of the communist regime, Reagan acidly expressed: "What can we think of a regime that so broadly trumpets its mission of peace and global disarmament and yet so callously and quickly commits a terrorist act to sacrifice the lives of innocent human beings?" The Soviets, it is fair to say, greatly contributed to such a lambasting tirade first by tersely denying that any of their MIG-23 fighters stationed in the Sakhalin Island had anything to do with the "disappearance" of KAL Flight 007 (a semantically correct statement, but one which evades the main issue nonetheless), and later on by going back on their tracks and accepting partial responsibility for their infamous act.

Can we say that the incident benefits the Soviets in any perceived way? Most certainly not. On the contrary, the decision made by the Soviet Command "to stop the intruder plane" may be viewed as a terrorist act, in their own skies of course but terrorist nonetheless. "Attacking an unarmed civilian plane", said Congressman Hartnett of South Carolina "is like attacking a school bus". There has not been, there isn't and there will never be an excuse big enough to warrant the perpetration of such a disgusting crime as the one that took place in the Northern Pacific!

Joining Flight 007 in Anchorage another KAL jet landed twenty minutes later. KAL Flight 015, also bound for Seoul, carried North Carolina Senator Jesse Helms and Idaho Senator Steve Symms to a conference in Seoul. Both men knew that Congressman Lawrence McDonald was among the passengers of Flight 007. They waited for McDonald to join them in the transit lounge of the airport but he never appeared. "Larry had no trouble sleeping on planes," said Symms, "so he stayed on board and we never saw him." Later, Kathryn MCDonald, the Congressman's wife, would appear on TV in Atlanta to denounce that her husband has been the victim of "an act of deliberate assassination."

What could be said of the American side of the story? Well, it comes as no surprise when the New Right has taken to use the incident to pound again on their long prevailing view that the Soviets are the scourge of God, so to speak. Senator Jesse Helms, perhaps the most outspoken representative of this New Right, put it bluntly when he said: "This is the best chance we ever had to paint these bastards into a corner." Closer still to the White House, an aid to President Reagan concluded that "it (the incident) is further evidence that the President was right when he said the Soviet Union is a country that is essentially evil."

The theme repeats itself endlessly: the Soviets cannot be trusted in any way whatsoever! With such a display of bluster and bravado, the Americans strongly emphasized the uncivilized nature of the Russian action. Let's make no mistake: a horrendous precedent has been set by the Soviet Union in downing an unarmed civilian plane, but why should the superpowers play so much of their dirty politics with the tragedy that surrounds the families of those 269 passengers?

Experienced airline pilots have said that there was no way for the Jumbo to be where it was without the aircraft's commander knowing about it. The navigational system of the 747 consists of three independent and totally self-regulating gyroscopes (a system that does no need information from outside the aircraft, relying solely on the data that has been fed to the on-board computer previous to the flight), that provide the crew with up-to-date information on the plane's actual position and flight path.

Had the on-board computer been fed the wrong information which resulted in the plane deviating from Red Route 20- the outermost commercial route for trans-Pacific flights and the one closer to Soviet air space? And if such is the case, could it be attributed solely to human error? These are questions that may go unanswered for the foreseeable future, but contrary to what many people think, the possibility that Korean Air Lines Flight 007 may have been a spy plane still lingers in the air.

Rebecca Scruton, 28, from Meriden, Connecticut, and the mother of two children found a seat in Flight 007 after wrestling with a passport problem that prevented her from boarding an earlier flight. She became a widow in December, when her husband Dale died of cancer at age 30. She decided to leave her children behind and make the flight alone. By such an unwilling act, Rebecca mothered both her children for a second time.

"Common sense," says Time magazine, "suggests that even the most expert observer flying six miles high in the dim predawn light is not likely to see anything that U.S. surveillance satellites have not repeatedly scrutinized and photographed in far greater detail."

But common sense also indicates that very few of today's spy satellites are deployed in a polar orbit around the Earth-an orbital configuration that is absolutely essential if any worthwhile photograph is to be obtained of areas like the Kamchatka Peninsula, Sakhalin Island or even the region around Vladivostok. Most devices used for spying purposes are launched into equatorial, or nearly equatorial, orbits for two reasons: a) there will always be more landmass under the path of a satellite launched with an equatorial configuration, and b) the satellite's solar panels (devices which collect the Sun's light and transform it into electricity to power the satellite) are exposed to the Sun longer and more directly.

Mary Jane Hendrie, 25, from Sault St. Marie, boarded Kal Flight 007 in New York en route to Tokyo where she intended to start her first job. She, like most of her fellow travellers chose to fly by Korean Air Lines because of the extremely low fares offered by the company for its flights to the Far East.

In a polar orbit the satellite remains in the Earth's shadow fifty percent of the time. Thus, it is of little use when it comes to obtain high-altitude, high resolution photographs. Of course it could be argued that a nuclear-powered satellite would be able to do the job as well or better and still avoid all of these complications. Certainly. But the U.S. has been consistently denying that it is using nuclear-powered satellites for spying purposes since the 1978 incident in which a Russian satellite re-entered the Earth's atmosphere, spreading debris and radiation from its nuclear power plant over 200 km. in the Canadian Arctic. Hence, if experience teaches us no to trust the Russians, can we be sure of the good intentions of the Americans? Definitely not.

Unfortunately, the world's reaction to the brutality of the Soviet action has been less than satisfactory. On the one side, and falling into line with American aims, Canada declared an immediate freeze on Sept. 6 of Aeroflot's landing rights at Mirabel International Airport in Montreal, which would be valid for 60 days. Said Canada's Minister of External Affairs, Allan MacEachen: "We hope that this suspension (of Aeroflot's landing rights) will make the Soviet authorities revise their decision as to the merits that a continuous evasion of their responsibility over the death of Canadians and so many other innocent passengers may carry."

Marilou Covey, 35, from Toronto, also boarded Flight 007 at New York's Kennedy Airport. Miss Covey was on her way to Hong Kong to work as a professor of English in the Chinese University. As of today, she and all the others mentioned above are still missing somewhere in the Sea of Japan. All are presumed dead.

The European powers, however, decided to maintain their independence from U.S. policy.Eleven of the fifteen members of NATO voted to suspend flights to the Soviet Union for only two weeks, hardly a concrete response from the West's forum.

Perhaps the most courageous response to the downing of the KAL plane may have been that of the International Air Pilots Association (IAPA) in their unilateral decision to boycott all commercial flights in and out of the USSR, starting September 8 and lasting 60 days or maybe longer. British Airways, Britain's national air carrier, immediately complied with the IAPA decision and cut all its flights to Moscow.

But the real losers (and this is not meant as a sarcastic joke), are the passengers and crew of KAL Flight 007. They paid the supreme sacrifice in the altar of human wrongdoing. Their innocence cannot be denied and yet they were the victims of strange and barbarous circumstances. It is with horror that we think of ourselves in place of the 269 people aboard that flight and realize how little our lives are worth in the world of power politics. Be as it may- either a human error in programming the computer, a deliberate attempt to spy on someone else's air space, or whatever- the fact remains that the demands of national security and the inviolability of souvereign skies took over at the moment of truth, and the missiles were fired without any regard whatsoever to the ensuing human tragedy.

Anyone of us could have been in that doomed aircraft. The simple fact that we were not on board does not pretend to exclude the thought of why so many lives were wasted and for what cause. Even though no amount of explaining and regret will ever bring back the lives that were lost, the sheer magnitude of the disaster will hopefully serve as as reminder that crucial mistakes usually carry an unacceptably high price.

To the Class of 1984

As a university graduate, you have something of interest to offer us: your degree, plus a wish to succeed in a professional environment. As one of Canada's major employers, we, too, have something of value to offer you: a respect for your academic achievement and a working milieu for your meaningful contribution.
We usually follow the same hiring patterns as the private sector; our recruitment activities, however, are currently affected by a low rate of employee departures and shrinking departmental budgets. We will be interviewing some candidates for anticipated vacancies; in other cases, we will be assessing applications and placing them in inventory, for future consideration.
We invite you to apply, if your degree is in one of the following areas:

Administration	Engineering
Commerce	Library Science
Computer Science	Mathematics/Statistics
Economics

The closing date for applications is 14 October 1983. The Financial Administration Test of Technical Knowledge will be held on 20 October 1983 at 19:00. Please ask your placement office about the exam location.
Pick up your copy of the Careers Public Service Canada publications at your campus placement office or at an office of the Public Service Commission of Canada.

Note: In light of the current reorganization within External Affairs Canada and the ongoing assessment by the department of its future personnel needs, there will be no Foreign Service Officer recruitment competition this year.

Aux finissants de 1984

En votre qualité de jeune universitaire, vous possédez des atouts de marque : votre diplôme, ainsi que votre désir de vous réaliser professionnellement. Nous avons, nous aussi, en tant que l'un des employeurs canadiens les plus importants, quelque chose à vous offrir : un grand respect pour votre succès académique ainsi qu'un milieu de travail où vous pourrez apporter une contribution appréciable.
Notre politique d'embauche ressemble normalement à celle du secteur privé; à l'heure actuelle nos activités de recrutement sont toutefois soumises à des contraintes budgétaires et à la diminution du taux de départ des employés. Nous désirons donc interviewer certains candidat(e)s pour des postes anticipés et dans d'autres cas, nous évaluerons les candidatures et les conserverons dans notre répertoire pour considération ultérieure.
Nous recrutons des diplômés d'université dans les domaines suivants :

Administration	Génie
Commerce	Bibliothéconomie
Informatique	Mathématiques/Statistique
Économie

La date limite du concours est le 14 octobre 1983. L'examen de connaissances techniques en gestion des finances se tiendra le 20 octobre 1983 à 19h. Veuillez vous adresser à votre bureau de placement pour savoir où auront lieu les examens.
Procurez-vous les brochures Carrières, Fonction publique Canada à votre bureau de placement ou à un bureau de la Commission de la Fonction publique du Canada.

Nota: En raison de la réorganisation qui s'effectue actuellement au sein du Ministère des Affaires extérieures et de l'évaluation que fait le ministère de ses besoins futurs en personnel, il n'y aura pas de recrutement d'agents du Service extérieur cette année.

No Go for Church

By Nick Blud

In an apparently minor item at last Friday's ECSU meeting a larger issue was approached and a conclusion reached.

An evangelical representative of the Church of Christ, Robert Blain, appealed to the ECSU board to obtain the free use of a room for bible study sessions. After intensive questioning it was revealed that one of the preacher's aims was to convert people to the Church of Christ.

ECSU V.P. Administration Gail MacDonald clarified the issue when she asked the board, "Do you want to support a religious group?" Unlike the existing Christian Fellowship organizations at Erindale, Blain represented an active group centred and controlled outside the student body.

ECSU's refusal to give Robert Blain the room illustrated that religious organizations of an external nature to the campus will not get any free support.

the discipline, social, selection and finance committees are formed and their role as members of council. Council has not, as of yet, come to a consensus as to how the committees will be selected. A suggestion was made by Gail MacDonald, the present secretary, that a meeting be held at a later date which would be open to all students where the positions would be filled.

Chairmen nominations were made for Chris Barr and Chris Parker. Frank McGrath was then nominated as provost chairman and a secret ballot was decided on.

Chris Barr, a 4th year Commerce student had a smooth-flowing, well-rehearsed speech in which she cited her various activities such as her involvement with P.E.C.S.U. and C.A.S.E. Her speech centred on her concern for improving the present organization and structure of council and the general atmosphere of residence as a whole.

Chris Parker also spoke of his experience and hoped to carry withan extension of last year's work as chairman.

Upon completion of the chairman and vice-chairman elections, the issue of whether or not council should wait until Phase III opens before printing phone directories. The decision that was arrived at was to put out a second issue of the directory when all Phase III students have arrived.

Other topics discussed were plans for promoting the social atmosphere in residence such as a beach party and a gym night. A raffle on the first house to be occupied in Phase III was one suggestion offered by Frank McGrath who also announced that Resbeat, the residence newspaper, was looking for new staff members. The Director of Housing, Mike Lavelle, was unable to attend the meeting due to a prior doctor's appointment.

Mike gets suggestive and Bob likes it backwards

By Maggie Rose
and Edward Bower

Mike Mandel was at his mental best Friday night at The Blind Duck. A huge crowd came to laugh at their friends. They were not disappointed as Mike Mandel manipulated a group of people for over an hour with his power of suggestion.

The evening began with card tricks and then featured Backwards Bob. Bob astounded the crowd with his agile mind as he figured out a magic square adding up to an arbitrary number, picked by the audience.

Bob's phonetic rendering of the phrase 'Sex and drugs and rock and roll and the light came back on', backwards, amused Bob and Mike as much as it did the audience. And when Bob played the William Tell Overture backwards on the recorder, and then replayed it forwards with the aid of his reel-to-reel, the people roared.

The stars of the evening, however, were the volunteers from the audience. After sorting the good from the not-so-good, Mandel 'keyed-in' the remaining subjects and started his magic.

All of the participants were treated to a 'Cruise of the Mind'. Unfortunately they were pestered by bugs and 'boonslangs'. Violent fluctuations of the thermometer caused some to disrobe and then others frantically searched for the electric blankets which their neighbours apparently possessed.

Mandel now had full control of their subconscious. He convinced them that their noses had dropped to the ground. He even managed to persuade one participant (a frosh naturally), that his private parts had vanished. After issuing a blood-curdling obscenity, he returned to the stage, and had no idea what had happened.

As a further example of his mental powers, Mandel had only to snap his fingers twice to cause his subjects to jump out of their seats. They began to look for concealed devices and suspect their neighbours had pinched them. He was also a marvelous salesman. Every time he mentioned the phrase 'Mennen Speedstick', he found a stageful of very enthusiastic buyers.

For a fleeting moment he gifted the girls with x-ray vision. None of them took full advantage of it. The guys, however, enjoyed it immensely when it was their turn.

One very able subject had problems holding onto his wallet. When he finally managed to hold onto it, the wallet became his only link to Scotty in the Transporter room. He also entertained the audience with his energetic Spanish dancing.

The participants left the stage with a peaceful ignorance of the events of the evening. They were, however, immediately enlightened upon entering the washrooms in the pub.

Mandel had control of the audience as well. We laughed and laughed, unconscious of ourselves.

Daniel

By Wanda Ferguson

Political persecution, capital punishment, human suffering and family bonds are some of the themes explored in the movie Daniel, a story which spans over fifteen years in the struggles of one family. Starring Edward Asner and Timothy Hutton, the movie is based on the book, The Story of Daniel, and is set during the McCarthy Era of the United States.

During the McCarthy Era, a fanatic by the name of General McCarthy started a continent-wide witch-hunt for communists. In this period a Jewish-American family by the name of Rosenberg was charged and convicted for treason and espionage for stealing the plans to the atomic bomb and selling them to the Russians.

The movie, Daniel, follows much the same story line and revolves around the central character, Daniel, who is played by Timothy Hutton. Hutton does a first-rate performance as the confused young man who is attempting to search out answers to his past and the life of his parents. Equal to the performance of Timothy Hutton, is that by Amanda Plummer who plays the part of his sister, Susan. Daniel and Susan as children were badly shaken by the final and apparently wrong conviction of their parents.

Throughout the movie, the setting jumps from the McCarthy Era and the court trial of Daniel's parents to a period approximately fifteen years later and the problems experienced by Susan. For Daniel, it is a double attack since he must endure the same type of suffering twice, first as a child and later as a young man. Daniel has been caught between two parallel periods of suffering and injustice.

Daniel is a hard-hitting, emotionally-stirring movie in which the themes range from general human topics to very specific political topics. Often, however, it appears that the sympathies of those involved in the movie such as Ed Asner, who in real life is well-known for his left-wing political involvement, become too obvious. Consequently, the movie tends to be somewhat overwhelmed with political opinions and comes dangerously close to being a piece of propaganda. At best, it is a strong social statement. Too often, messages in the movie such as, "They're still screwing us...", referring to the establishment are quite negative and politically-based.

Overall, Daniel, is a deeply moving story, but unfortunately, they have overdone it a little with their obvious personal political convictions which take away from the movie as a whole.

news The Progress

It's Fauna and Paleoecology

By Liane MacLellan

The first presentation in the Fall Biology Seminar Series, was given by Dr. Robert Hook of the Department of Geology at the University of Kentucky.

Dr. Hook, who earned his M.Sc. at U of T, was well received by the professors and students who were in attendance.

In his studies, Hook combines the disciplines of Evolutionary Biology with Geology; the first poses questions about evolutionary processes and the second provides data for the answers from examinations of rock formations.

Coal-bearing rocks called "Upper Carboniferous", are believed to represent ancient peat swamps. Within these formations are fossils of vertibrates from a time when mammals had not yet evolved. There are six areas in the world which are considered principal Westphalian tetrapod localities. Of these, Linton, Ohio, Joggins, Nova Scotia and Florance, Nova Scotia are designated for research.

The other three areas are in England, Ireland and Czechoslovakia.

A comparison of the findings at the Nova Scotia and Linton mine locations revealed different characteristics in each area.

In Nova Scotia, the rock matrix was composed of fine grained mudstones and sandstones. The fossils found were from adult terrestrial tetrapods. No fish fossils were found in these areas.

In addition, fossil tetrapods were found inside tree stumps which had been preserved in the upright positon. An explanation for this may be that these animals entered the trunks for refuge, or else were washed inside during a flood period.

In the Linton mine area, fossils were first found by coal miners as they brought up the coal. The matrix encasing these relics was "cannel coal", which is scale-like and can be broken open to reveal well preserved fossils. The most abundant fossils found here were the remains of boney fish and primitive sharks. A few alligator-like amphibian fossils were also found. Reptilian fossils were rarely found, which suggests this area was mainly aquatic.

In mapping the thickness of the coal deposits at the Linton mine, it was discovered that the deposits were twelve feet deep in the centre and tapered off to two feet or less at the edges. The fan-shaped nature of the deposits suggested that these areas were once channels.

If a river channel is abandoned, due to less water in the river, a bay forms. The bay fills with silt and debris and eventually becomes a swamp. In the swamp, organic material accumulates and peat forms. With time, this may become compacted into coal.

To gain understanding of these processes, modern channel systems, such as the Mississippi River delta, are studied. Models developed from these systems help to hypothesize about the conditions surrounding the formation of the fossils found in these coal bearing rocks.

In postulating evolutionary, environmental and climatic characteristics in this way, researchers must consider the biases inherent in fossil records. Some of these biases include the conditions surrounding death, the chances of being preserved, the chances of the fossil being found, the condition it is found in and the ability to identify the fossil once it is found.

Professor Hook continues to research the coal fields and the factors attributed to these deposits. These Carboniferous rocks may prove to be invaluable to scientists such as vertibrate paleontologists, if they choose to probe these goldmines of preserved, ancient life forms.

We Beat Engineers!

The Warriors soccer schedule began last Tuesday in a light rain, but the Erindale team managed a 1-0 win over the Engineers despite the slippery pitch.

This was actually the debut of the Warriors' Division 1 entry. The large turnout of soccer enthusiasts led to the formation of a second team entered in Division II. That squad's first game was last Thursday, but results were not available at press time. In the match against the Engineers, the Erindale side started strongly, and broke through for an early goal when Neil Brown found Rob Rukavina open just outside the penalty area. Rob then calmly headed the ball to rookie Peter Mosley, who had only to tap the ball into the open net. Erindale continued to dominate in the first half, limiting the Engineers to a few isolated forays into the green team's end.

This pattern continued until late in the game. At that point the Engineers applied the pressure, forcing several corner kicks. They were stymied by the active Warrior backline, particularly sweeper George Hazineh and right back John Armstrong. Any ball that eluded the backs was quickly snapped up by goalie Frank Lovett to preserve his shutout.

The team's showing was encouraging to coach John Robb. They controlled play during most of the match and showed that as they play together more the individual talents will mesh to form a cohesive unit. The loss of veterans such as Pepe Lio to graduation has been compensated for by the arrival of good rookies such as Mosley and mid-fielder Boris Guzman. With a little luck thrown in, a fifth consecutive championship is a distinct possibility.

Captain John Hazineh eludes a potential tackler.

Rugby off to Good Start

It's a grand old team to play for,
And it's a grand old team to know,
And if you saw them play last Wednesday,
It's enough to make your heart go
Oh... Oh... Oh...

Erindale's Rugby team caused many hearts to skip a beat with their play against arch rival Pharmacy. Last season these two teams were deadlocked after two periods of overtime and another game had to be scheduled due to darkness. Unfortunately Pharmacy sidelined Erindale from the playoffs in that second game.

This year's team wanted to revenge last year's loss and aided by the transfusion of six rookies, the Warriors came out on top by a score of 6-4.

Paul Kaminski was the difference in the game, as he connected on two difficult long distance kicks, to give the Warriors all the scoring they needed. The Warrior pack dominated in the first half with excellent runs by Dave Farrow and Walter Tersigni added to the dominance by Erindale in the first half.

Paul Kaminski gave the Erindale lads a first half lead of 3-0 on a 35 yard kick. In the second half Pharmacy picked up the pace, but the Warriors were able to take advantage of another Pharmacy penalty to take a 6-0 lead Pharmacy carried the play much of the second half and eventually slipped in for a try late in the game. However, a missed convert attempt enabled the Warriors to hold a narrow 6-4 lead and hang on for the win.

The next Warrior game is Thursday, September 29 at 4:15 vs. New College at the St. George Campus.

Cross Country Meet

The Cross-Country Meet will take place at the Erindale Campus, on a terrain of fields, roads and trails. The meet should test the athletes' endurance, ability and competitive spirit.
